Cancer Liaison Service

Dartmouth Caring's Cancer Liaison service provides support and advice to patients who have a cancer diagnosis and are undergoing treatment.

We support patients through effective communication and liaison with their Oncology centre and GP, with the aim of helping them to remain in control of their health.

Who is this service for?

Any patient, with a diagnosis of cancer who may need advice regarding their treatment, symptoms or practical needs. This may be achieved through a single contact or a number of contacts throughout the duration of treatment.

Accessing the service

This service can be accessed via your GP, Community nurse or directly via Dartmouth Caring

Our experienced specialist cancer nurse is available to visit you either, in your own home, or nursing/residential home and will help identify your needs and discuss the support available to you and your family

The aim of our service is to:

- Maximise patients independence and quality of life through advice and support
- Provide support and information about treatment and possible side effects
- Direct patients to other organisations for advice and information
- Support patients and their families in making decisions
- Act as a liaison and link between patients and health care professionals in both the community and hospital settings
- Provide emotional and psychological support to patients, their families and carers
